Apart from an exquisite selection of works by the Brücke artists, the current Online Only Auction “Men, Nature and Jewelry“ (ends October 15 as of 3 p. m.) also includes an array of true gems: Pieces of jewelry by Karl Schmidt-Rottluff, which are hardly ever available on the auction market.

Karl Schmidt-Rottluff began to make jewelry in Dangast around 1910 and continued this craft until an old age. So making jewelry was far more than just an episode in Schmidt-Rottluff's artist life, as he established it as an independent genre alongside painting, print art and sculpting. As an autodidact he used professional silversmith tools, however, he did without fine soldering so the final pieces showed traces from the making, the hammering, bending and clamping. His rings, pendants, bracelets and necklaces testify to the power of authenticity and were personal gifts for the wives of close friends, collectors and patrons. He also used stones he found on extensive walks along the beach as objects for his jewelry, turning them into marvelous sculptural gems.

“Next to Emil Nolde and Ernst Ludwig Kirchner, Schmidt-Rottluff was the most prolific and experimental jewelry maker of the Brücke artists. What they all have in common: the pieces were actually worn. Initially by their wives, later also by the wives of their collectors, who, along with their husbands, were close friends of the artists.”

Dr. Mario von Lüttichau, academic consultant at Ketterer Kunst

The Hermann Gerlinger Collections offers a significant and representative array of objects from the jewelry oeuvre of Schmidt-Rottluff. Select pieces with excellent provenances from the artist's surrounding are now up for auction.
